To get the material for the former scene, a kinetoscope camera is now working every day in a Maine truck garden. It is set up had charge of the affairs of the defunct bank since his appointment as receiver in 185, tendered his resignation. His resignation was due, it is said, to the desire of the creditors to reduce the heavy expense contingent upon the long-drawn-out settlement. At that time it was agreed among a large number of the former depositors that Miss Little, who has been employed as clerk in the receiver's office, and who is thoroughly familiar with the affairs of the bank, should be recommended for the position.

Attorney E. C. Wetten, counsel for the receiver, is a strong advocate of Miss Little's claim to the appointment, and is confident she will be selected by the court. He said: "Miss Little is not only fully qualified for the office, but from her long connection with the bank prior to the failure is familiar with every detail of affairs in connection with the receivership. Mr. Metcalf tendered his resignation with the understanding that Miss Little would be appointed." pear.

It will continue to be on the lookout, and will see the farmer strip down the huaks to see if the corn is ripe enough, and finally gather the ears into his basket and go away to come again, hack down the stalky and carry them away upon his back. The farmer's boy and his dog may appear in the picture and other incidents take place. Few exposures are necessary for this film, not more than one or two a day on the actual growth of the corn, while the farmer's actions will require the usual rapid exposure. inderstanding that alies Little would be appointed."

Miss Little also enjoys the distinction of being the first woman bookkeeper to be regularly employed in a Chicago bank. She served in that capacity for the Dime Savings Bank for several years prior to the failure and is considered a woman of rare business ability. She lives with her widowed mother.

In speaking of her possible appointment and the objections raised by certain of the creditors, him Little said:

"I suppose they object to my having such an office from the mere fact that I am a woman, I am fully capable of taking charge of affairs, and I am personally acquainted with many of the former depositors."

posure.

To watch the building of a ship, the camera will be permanently fixed in a building to be built purposely for it and constructed with a solid foundation so that there will be no vibration. Great care will be taken to get the correct fotal distance and the best advantage of light.

It will not be necessary to make continuous exposures, but only at such times as the work of construction is actually going on, and then at intervals consistent with the rapidity of the action. During the raising of a large frame a large number of exposures may be necessary. At other times but one or two in an hour will suffice, and there may be hours and perhaps days when there will be no action on the side next the camera.

When the film is finished and projected upon the screen by the kintescope, the beholder will see first of all the yard, with the frame of a vessel scattered about, and the stage-poles and empty blocks in the foreground. Then the huse sticks of timber which make the keel. Then will come the process of raising the frames, or riba at which stage the vessel seems to take shape the most rapidly.

Then will come the covering or planking. While this is being done the deckhouses are growing and the masts are being stuck in. Now comes the proparations for the launching. The stagings are taken down and the gallant craft stands naked, ready for the dip into the Kennebec.

The master builder raises his hand. All is ready. The tide is lapping the heel of the craft and high water is marked. Under the huge hulk workmen with mallets and axes split and drive out the shores. There is just the least perceptible movement. The young woman in white smashes the bottle of wine on the bows and the camera catches the fish of the trickling liquid. Faster and faster moves the ship. The smoke rises from the ways, and the craft bounds into the water.

Went Under Many Names, but It Was Always Chicken.

REPUBLIC SPECIAL.

Omaha, Neb., May 18.—The time-honored affinity between the preacher and the spring chicken was exemplified at the banquet given at the Millard Hotel by the churchmen of Omaha to the clergy and lay delegates of the thirty-fourth annual council of the Episcopal Diocese of Nebraska. One hundred covers were laid and the "chicken" was beautifully served. It appeared on the menu as "roast spring chicken demi glace," with sorbet excelsion and Roquefort cheese upon either side of it. The table was tastefully decorated with asparagus ferns and bouquets of roses.

The toasts, of which eight were responded to, were all germane to the work of the church, but were sprightly and spiced with sallies of wit.

James M. Woolworth, D. C. L., chancellor of the diocese, was toastmaster. He introduced first the Right Reverend A. L. Williams, coadjutor Bishop, who responded to the toast, "The Diocese," The Bishop remarked that the functions of a toastmaster were like those of a set of artificial teeth—to fill in the gaps between the jaws. He then related several anecdotes drawn from personal experiences in connection with his office in Nebraska, and set the ball rolling on the word" coadjutor," and thereafter nearly every speaker took his turn at punning on the word word. Henry W. Yates said it meant one who agitates; a "coadjutator."

To Henry W. Yates, who was assigned to "Our Bishops," the editor of the programme had given this line from Shakespeare: "The gentleman is learned, and a most rare speaker." Mr. Yates thought this was an oblique reference to his being an underdone orator.
